

"India Cannot Be Pushed Around": Rahul Gandhi On India—China Relations

During his interaction at Stanford University, Mr Gandhi also supported New Delhi's policy of having its relationship with Russia in the context of the Ukrainian war, despite the pressure it feels from the West.

PATNA: CONGRESS DARPAN

Stanford (California): Congress leader Rahul Gandhi has asserted that India cannot be pushed around by China as he underlined that the relationship between the two neighbours is going to be "tough" and not an easy one.

Mr Gandhi, who is in the US for a three-city US tour, made the remarks on Wednesday night in response to a question from Indian students at the Stanford University Campus in California.

"How do you see the India—China relationship evolving in the next 5—10 years?" he was asked.

Mr Gandhi replied, "It's tough right now. I mean, they've occupied some of our territory. It's rough. It's not too easy (a relationship)." "India cannot be pushed around. That something is not going to happen," Mr Gandhi said.

India and China are also locked in a lingering border standoff in eastern Ladakh for three years.

The bilateral relationship came under severe strain following the deadly clash in Galwan Valley in eastern Ladakh in June 2020.

India has maintained that the bilateral relationship cannot be normal unless there is peace in the border area.

During his interaction at Stanford University, Mr Gandhi supported New Delhi's policy of having its relationship with Russia in the context of the Ukrainian war, despite the pressure it feels from the West.

"We have a relationship with Russia, we have certain dependencies on Russia. So, I would have a similar stance as the Government of India," Mr Gandhi said in response to a question when asked does he supports India's neutral stance on Russia.

At the end of the day, India has to look for its own interest. India, he said, is a big enough country whereby it generally will have relationships with other countries.

It's not so small and dependent that it will have a relationship with one and nobody else, he added.

"We will always have these types of relationships. We will have better relationships with some people, evolving relationships with other people. So that balance is there," the former Congress president said.

Supporting a strong relationship between India and the United States, Mr Gandhi underscored the importance of manufacturing and both countries collaborating in emerging fields like data and artificial intelligence. Simply focusing on the security and defence aspect of this bilateral relationship is not enough he said.

Till when BJP's politics of polarization

The BJP, through its huge network of supporting organizations and media bowing before the government, is promoting an agenda that has no place for the problems of the people. The only aim is to keep the masses engaged in religious and emotional issues. The richness of India's cultural and religious heritage lies in its diversity.

Many poets and writers have narrated how caravans of people of different cultures and races from different parts of the world reached this land and together they created a bouquet of multi-coloured flowers that is India. The culmination of this process of people joining together was the freedom struggle when people belonging to different religions, castes and speaking different languages fought shoulder to shoulder to free India from foreign rule. During the time when mutual love and harmony was increasing in the country, at the same time some such forces also emerged whose thinking was narrow and communal and who tried to disrupt this process. BJP is promoting the politics of polarization.

BJP has done in every election what it has been doing for years — that is, link everything with religion, make every issue emotional and create more and more misunderstandings among people of different religions.

The BJP, through its huge network of supporting organizations and media bowing before the government, is promoting an agenda that has no place for the problems of the people. The aim is only to keep the masses engaged in religious and emotional issues.

India's shared culture is being attacked from all sides. Life of common people is becoming difficult but every possible effort is being made to divert attention from their problems. People's problems should be paramount in a democracy. We should continuously strive to build a true democracy.
